

Groupy[™] from Stardock Brings Browser-like Tabs to Windows Apps Today

Managing your desktop windows is now easier than ever with tabbed groups

Plymouth, MI – December 12, 2017 – Today, Stardock released Groupy, a new utility that brings browser-like tabs to your Windows applications. Groupy lets Windows® users group their desktop windows together in tabbed groups as easily as browsers let you group websites together.

Once installed, users can drag a window to another window. The two will combine into a single window, with each window receiving a tab in the title bar. To ungroup, users simply drag the tab off the group.

"It's very useful for trying to organize multiple Explorer windows or Office apps," said Angela Marshall, General Manager of Stardock Software. "With Groupy, your entire desktop works the same way that your web browser works. And Groupy works on all the most popular versions of Windows - including Windows 7, 8, and 10."

Once a group is created, users can quickly switch between different windows in a group with a simple hot-key or by clicking on the tab.

"I spend a lot of time in Adobe Photoshop, Microsoft Word and my Pictures folder," said Marshall. "Now, I just combine the three together and hot-key switch between them as I work. It's irresistibly helpful in getting things done."

Users can group and run similar apps together - like Google Chrome, Microsoft Edge, and Mozilla Firefox - all in the same window, each with their own tab.

Groupy can also automatically add launched programs into an existing tab group. For example, a user who opens a new Explorer window or a new Office document can have that window become a tab in an existing group.

Groupy is now available stand-alone for $9.99 at www.stardock.com/products/groupy. It is also included in Stardock's Object Desktop suite, which contains over a dozen desktop enhancement software products. The suite is currently on sale for $29.99 and you can learn more at: www.objectdesktop.com.
